

National Principals Month 2019: A Message from NASSP

You see us at concerts, athletic events and other school functions, but the outside world doesn't always recognize the effects of a principal's work.

We find the best teachers we can for each classroom and the best personnel for our school. And, like an orchestra conductor, we harness the talents of every individual to move the school toward a common goal.

We make the school not just free from violence, but a secure environment where each student feels valued and free to be their authentic selves. And we create conditions that empower each student to reach their greatest potential.

The principal's job is immensely challenging, but it's worth it for the reward of seeing our kids succeed and reach for their dreams.

So, join NASSP in celebrating this National Principals Month and make sure that if you see good things happening in your local school, to take a moment to #thankapincipal.
